Some of His Practical Jokes-A Bewildered Baker.

The late Artemus Ward (Charles F. Browne) knew what he was about when he courted the company of actors and journalist so assiduously. He took from them much more than he gave, good company as he was, and it was the actors who taught him to give expression to his irresistible flow of spirits in a succession of practical jokes of a harmless sort, yet comical beyond measure by their very oddity and unexpectedness. "Come in here! come in here!" said he one day in Boston to the companion walking with him. "Come in here; we will have some fun." It was a Boston pie-bakery which they entered—a place where pies were a specialty—where pies and nothing but pies were sold, wholesale and retail, all the life long day. Brown approached the counter, behind which the proprietor of the establishment was standing, and asked in his bland, insinuating voice, "Have you any pies?" "Pies!" replied the astounded proprietor. "Yes, pies." "Pies!" repeated the man more dumb-founded, "Of course—pies!" "Pies!!!" gasped the shopman once more, gazing at Brown as if he thought him an escaped lunatic. "Oh, well, if you haven't got any pies, I'll inquire somewhere else; come, Jack!" and he marched his triend out of the shop again before the salesman could recover his wits.

Artemus delighted to fillip the sedate respectability of Boston, while loving the place smeerely. One day, in the early afternoon, having a lecture to deliver that evening, some one of his friends concluded that he would not be able to talk so well at night if he kept on talking in front of the bar at the Parker House. They accordingly insisted on an immediate adjournment, and Artemus, suspecting the game, determined to revenge himself. He locked arms with two erdered to be ready to go to Brownsville, gentlemen very well known, indeed, in the city—one a manager of the leading theater, the other a public officer high in the confidence and books of the commonwealth, and walked off them along the city's most with crowded thoroughfare. Acting as if he was in custody and needed the care here on a visit; Mr. C. A. Gaston and of his companions, and making his voice conspicuously loud, Artemus Mr. Fred Brennan, of the Avalanche, has began: "Gentleman, you are probably returned from Lake Pontchartrain resorts; aware that the noble red man, the incomparable savage of our plains, forests, and mountain fastnesses whom I have studied closely in his native wilds, has various modes of expressing the emotions which swell his generous bosom, and of giving voice to the ceremonial traditions inherited from an immemorial ancestry. His cries and his dances are equally peculiar, and be has a particular sort of whoop for each particular occasion. The scalp dance, the war dance, the bear dance, the dance of skulls, each has its approof anyone, with the exception of the suf-ferer, and no one knows what it is to suf-fer until he has experienced it. Sad is it to know, that hats are sold so low, at N. gentleman, can give you an idea of Bach's, the hatter, under the Peabody of these vigorous cries. They must Hotel, and yet it is astonishing to see the be heard to be appreciated; and to him who has never heard them they are startling as the revelations of a life time. In illustration of what I have said, gentlemen, I will now proceed to give you an imitation of the yell of the polite, live and enterprising hatter, at 309 nobie savage as, tomabawk in hand, he springs exultant from his ambush upon the astounded foe.' Thereupon Brown executed a startling and tremendous war-whoop, which made people turn for blocks around and drew upon him the attention of

"I will now give you," said Artemus, after regaining his breath, "a faint imitation of the warrior's cry as he returns to his wigwam, the scalp of his enemy dangling in gory ghastliness at Another war-whoop; and thus the scamp kept up his game for a mile or so, until his friends got him at last to his hotel. EQUITABLE
